"The scutterman on the other side could not sry down the "tain! in the blood. He colled attention to the tact that water a colored man set on the other side, not one of his colleagues invited into to his tones. The projudice against social equality was as strong in the North as it was in the South, be declared, and all talk to the contrary was "hyperritiest rot and cant."

Mr. Gilbert said he was willing to admit the projudice against the negro in New England. He thought that perhaps there was a greater physical repugnance toward the negro there than in the South. But because use man personally fest a prejudice against a negro he did not talink he had a right to attempt to enforce it upon others.

Mr. Cochran (Mo.) argued that it was the boundern duty of the government to stop the shipment of war material to South africa. He declared that within forty miles of his hound there was a British gazinson engaged in buying war supplies, and said the existence of a camp near New Crisquas was notorious. He insisted that it was the duty of the administration to prevent this violation of the law of ane-traility.
